The ADHD Drug Dangerous, But Attractive To Cats

The attention deficit hyperactivity disorder drug Adderall has become a common and dangerous pharmaceutical threat for companion animals, especially cats, experts say. The drug seems to appeal to the finicky feline tastes, according to a board certified veterinary toxicologist who described 152 cases of feline intoxication with the drug that were called in to the national Animal Poison Control Center. Labeling Changes to Flea and Tick Products

Washington -- The Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) will be making sweeping changes in the labeling and approval of existing and new spot-on flea control products to stave off possible adverse reactions for dogs and cats. Visit New Labeling for Some Flea and Tick Products

ACVO/Merial National Service Dog Eye Exam

The American College of Veterinary Ophthalmologists (ACVO) will host another public service event in veterinary medicine the month of May, 2010. Over 160 ACVO board certified veterinary ophthalmologists will donate their services to provide eye examinations to Service Dogs across America and Canada. Best of all, the Service Dog's owner/agent will incur no cost for these services. It is anticipated that through these efforts Service Dog health can be improved and potential disease averted for thousands of animals. Visit ACVO Vision For Animals for additional information
